ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

As is often the case in historical research the work of one evolves from the cooperation of many.

I'd like to express my gratitude to the Director of the Baltimore Enoch Pratt Free Library, Mrs. Anna Curry, and to the Assistant Director, Dr. John Blegen, for their continuing support.

I am particularly grateful to Wesley Wilson, head of Pratt's Maryland Department and to his entire staff.

Eva Slezak, librarian in charge of the Afro American Collection at Pratt, provided welcome assistance and moral support on a number of occassions.

My thanks to Ed Mantler, Dick Elder, Vince Snowden, and Karen Mewshaw.

A number of friends and associates rendered assistance in one form or another. Bill Forshaw, Agnes Callum, Alma Moore, Leroy Graham, Dean Krimmel of the Baltimore Peale Museum, and Jacques Kelly of the staff of the Baltimore Evening Sun.

A very special thanks to my dear friend and mentor, Edna Kanely, whose friendship, support, and expertise has meant so much to me in my life and in my work.

FOREWORD

Documents on a federal, state, and municipal level abound with information pertaining to the Nineteenth Century Black population of Baltimore.

Although these records are fragmented throughout a number of agencies statewide, the overwhelming majority are stored in the archives of three major institutions.

The Afro-American Collection and the Microform Center of the Baltimore Enoch Pratt Free Library store a series of clipping and query files, Baltimore City directories, newspapers, Federal Census Population Records, special collections, and thousands of volumes reflecting the life of the Black family in Maryland.

The collection of the Maryland Historical Society in Baltimore provides a number of primary source materials including a document room that houses indexed manuscripts referring to, in part, the slave and free Black population of Maryland.

The State Archives in the Annapolis Hall of Records has preserved the largest single repository of primary source materials in the area. Deeds or wills of manumission, orphans court records, indentures of apprenticeship, and applications for certificates of freedom are but a few of the manuscripts offering a unique insight into the lifestyles of Maryland's Afro-American population.

Although an obvious wealth of documents exist statewide, comparatively little work has been accomplished in the area of the indexing and compilization of primary source data.

It is my hope that the material collected in this book will present a starting point for further research and act as a catalyst for the initiation of new work in related fields.

THE EFFECT OF IMMIGRATION

ON THE NEGRO IN BALTIMORE 1850-1860

Introduction

Generalization is the major enemy of history. It remains the tempting forbidden fruit most often responsible for the downfall of a number of historians.

A look at the lifestyle of the American Negro in the Ante-Bellum Decade will serve to highlight the problems inherent in conducting historical research.

There are a number of differences in the condition of the free Negro and the slave in any given area of geographical focus. The life of a slave living on a cereal plantation in Carroll County was likely to be quite different from the life of a domestic slave residing in Mount Vernon Place, Baltimore.

Boundaries determining factors of lifestyle were not simply a division between urban and rural settings. A plantation slave on the cereal farm in Carroll County would find conditions considerably more tolerable than would the slave on a typical Louisiana sugar plantation. The free man of color residing in Mobile, Alabama, would face daily restrictions on his freedom uniquely different from the free man living in Lerew's alley, Baltimore.

The lifestyle of the slave and freeman could vary significantly, for a number of reasons, ward by ward in a sector of geographical focus the size of Baltimore.

There were a number of similarities in the life of the Negro, slave and free, regardless of residence. It is here where the temptation to generalize is greatest; where, at times, the historian loses sight of the vast differences between communities and the reasons for their uniqueness.

Therefore, the work of the "Local Historian" is extremely important in better determining areas of uniqueness reflected in lifestyles of any given race in the community.

It is incorrect to assume that past history is already laid before us in an open book. The pages are in constant revision and the epilogue as yet un-written.

From 1810 to the abolition of slavery in the state in November 1864, Maryland contained the largest free Negro population in the country. Intense competetion between white, slave, and free Negro male laborers fostered growing feelings of belligerence between slaveholders and the free Negro. Adding to the slaveholders chagrin was the introduction, into the labor market, of thousands of white immigrant workers willing to toil for low wages.

Negro males found themselves at the bottom of the social and economic totem pole. Gradually forced from a number of occupations they had once excelled in, thousands were replaced in the labor market by cheap immigrant labor.

Slaveholders, particularly those of the Eastern Shore holding strong political influence in the Maryland State Legislature, seized upon this oppurtunity to initiate a series of campaigns aimed at the total annihilation of the free Negro.

State legislation was enacted throughout the 1850s that imposed severe restrictions on the free Negro in trade and labor. Seperate sanctions were set for crimes committed by free Negroes; sanctions which often resulted in the sale of the Negro into slavery.

Social restrictions were initiated or intensified. Travel restrictions were regulated and the meetings of large numbers of Negroes were forbidden unless supervised by a white person or approved by a justice.

When a community of people fails to revolt against unjust measures taken against it the obvious question we must ask ourselves is why?

Chapter 1

The Effect Of Immigration On The Negro In Baltimore 1850 - 1860

Any study of the effect of foreign labor on the Negro family in Maryland would have to include a careful study of two of Maryland's largest community of immigrants; The German and the Irish.

The mid and late 1840's were years of turmoil in Europe. There was revolutlon in the streets of Berlin, Hungarian revolt agalnst Austrian domination, and the failure and destructlve blight of the potato crop in Ireland in 1846. As a result, hundreds of thousands of immigrants passed into this country between 1847 and 1857.

The effect of these events on labor in the Eastern Seaboard States, consequently on the free Negro and slave population of Maryland was enormous.

Immigrants began to drive the Negro male in increasing numbers from the labor market in Baltimore. Evidence of this phenomona can be obtained by comparing the wards circling the inner harbor area of Baltimore between 1850 and 1860 in the census[1]. The population of German immigrants in the first ward increased by over 100% from 1850 to 1860. The number of Germans, which stood at 4,339 constituted 30% of the entire population of the first ward by 1860.

	1850 Free	1850 Slave	1860 Free	1860 Slave
ward 1	1,091	79	460	54
ward 2	917	85	628	46
totals	29,075	2,946	25,680	2,218

Although the boundaries of wards had changed by 1860, making an exact comparison with 1850 impossible, the total population of Baltimore reflects a dramatic decrease in the Negro population. Population figures dropped from 32,021 in 1850 to 27,898 in 1860 (a decrease of 4,123). The white population, in the same period of time, had grown by 9,667.

The effect of labor competetion was much greater on the Negro male than on the Negro female. The overall effect on the Negro family, however, was considerable.

Many females had training and experience in various forms of domestic labor (i.e. cook, washerwoman, ironer)[2]. The demand for their services remained, for the most part, unaffected by immigration. Most whites demanded that their domestics live on or near the premises. As a result a number of families were seperated, at least a greater portion of time.

To help alleviate the problem of physical seperation Negro families attempted, whenever possible, to live as close to their source of employment as they could. As a consequence there was no segregation of neighborhoods by race. Housing for these families was often procured on small side streets or in alleys behind the houses of whites. A study of Baltimore City directories of the 1850's will provide evidence in the "Colored Section" of dozens of alleys inhabited by Negro families.

Slave families were also effected radically by the influx of immigrants. As the need for male slave labor decreased many males were sold to traders and sent to the New Orleans market. Here again the exception was the female slave.

The very nature of "Town Slavery" promoted the break-up of large numbers of families. Of 1,308 slaveholders in Baltimore in 1860, 962 or 73.5% were owners of one slave[3].

One of the ironies of "Town Slavery" was the inability of authority to prohibit a degree of intermingling of slave and free in the populace. Although state legislation forbld the gathering of large numbers of Negroes without the supervision of whites, peaceful corner gatherings were overlooked[4].

Another practice which allowed a great deal of mingling of the populace was the practice known as the "hiring out" of slaves. "The hiring out of slaves was accomplished in several ways. One, the owner signed a binding contract between himself and the employer; a contract which covered a specified time period and pre-arranged payments to the owner, with liability for the slave's welfare in the hands of the employer. Two, an owner allowed his or her slave to hire themselves out to an employer of their own choosing, provided the slave paid, out of his earnings, a pre-arranged amount to his owner on a regular basis."[5]

The practice of hiring out led to a greater sense of overall freedom of movement in the slave community. There were occassions when slaves were allowed to live with free family members in a household seperate from that of the owner. "As this practice evolved incidences of seperate habitation for slaves became apparent in the city. Some slaves were allowed....by their owners....to hlre themselves out, and to keep a household of their own seperate from the property of the owner."[6]

The danger of forming close family ties in a house where one spouse was a slave was of course the possibility of the breakup of the family by the sale of that slave to a new owner. Nevertheless the practice was evident in a number of cities and towns throughout the South.

One way to study, in greater detail, the effect of immigration on Negro labor is to look at the demise of a single occupation, performed for decades, solely by the Negro.

Prior to 1850 the caulking of ships in Baltimore was accomplished by the Negro male. So great was their monopoly of the occupation that it was presumed that prior to 1858 there were no white caulkers in the city.[7]

The influence held by males of this profession provided a rare instance of real versus imagined power in an otherwise powerless class of people.

Ships would not float, no matter how well they were built, without a good caulking job. A study of Baltimore's inner harbor ward 2 for the ante-bellum decade shows that of 168 Negro males holding jobs 112 were directly affected by or affected the shipping trade. It is easy to see that the profession of caulking was crucial to the economy of the city of Baltimore and the state of Maryland.

As a result, Negro males formed an association of caulkers to insure their control of the profession. Whites, strongly opposed to the unionization of any group of Negroes in their midst, swallowed their pride and fear. They had no other choice. By the late 1850's the situation had proved intolerable and radical changes were instituted.

Pressure was brought to bear on white shipbuilders by the association of Negro caulkers on several levels. One, they insisted on having the final say over who was to be hired for a particular job. Two, whites were outraged by the wages being demanded by the Negro caulkers. They were receiving a market hlgh $1.75 a day while white caulkers in other port cities were earning $1.25 a day.[8]

Whites, not in the habit of being dictated to by Negroes, sought the labor of white caulkers working in other ports. A number of these workers were immigrants who had brought their trades with them from Germany and Ireland. This intrusion of whites into an occupation previously controlled by the Negro brought about a number of labor riots in the city.[9]

Labor problems were not unique to the Baltimore area in the ante-bellum decade. Labor militancy was rampant throughout the 1850's as labor riots ensued between whites and blacks struggling for the same jobs.[10]

One noted historian has stated "Whenever white and colored workers gathered in numbers, riots were imminent during the middle of the nineteenth century."[11]

By 1860 the job busting (for the most part by violent means) had excluded a great number of Negro caulkers from the shipyards. lt is not difficult to see how occupations with little control by the Negro fell easlly into the hands of the white laborer. "The incoming Irish were quite willing to labor, haul merchandise or other material, or even work as porters and waiters as "job busting" became a normal tactic and made most jobs for Negroes scarce by 1860.[12]

A number of Negro males left tbe city in search of work, further fragmenting the family unit. Those not trained as domestics "Probably left the city to go to New York or Boston, if they were free, or were sold into the deep South, if they were slave."[13]

Why didn't the black male revolt against their exclusion from the labor market in Baltimore? Did he hold a means of rebellion or revolt and if so, why did he fail to pursue those means?

Chapter 2

Slaveholders And The Law: the failure of the Negro to unify

The Church evolved, in the Reconstruction period, as the most powerful institution in the life of the Negro in this country. The community unified behind church leaders, using the power of the vote, in an attempt to gain social, political, and economic advances. Such was not the case, however, in the ante-bellum decade. Although elements of the Black Church had formed by the middle of the nlneteenth century, it was by no means the powerful institution it was to become in the Reconstruction period. It was not yet elevated, for obvious reasons, to what was to become its post war status as central to the values and ideals of the community.

A community may act, or fail to act, motivated by the fear of the loss of an ideal or value crucial to its survival. The Negro Community had no power to legislate laws, little economic power, and the inability to do much of anything outside of white authorlty.

What did the Negro fear losing as much, if not more, than his own life? The answer, of course, was the family.

A study of laws passed by the Maryland State Legislature will reflect the constant attempt to place restrictions on the rights of the Negro.

One example of this was legislation passed in 1832 as a response to the fear of slave insurrection.[14] The Nat Turner slave revolt in Southampton, Virginia in the summer of 1831 caused a wave of panic to spread throughout the South. As a result severe restrictons on the rights of the Negro were imposed.

In Maryland, for example, religious meetings not attended by whites were forbidden wlthout the permission of a justice. Negroes could not sell merchandise without a certificate issued by that same justice. The Sale of liquor and firearms to Negroes was forbidden. Restrictions were placed on travel into and out of the state.

The punishment often reflected in this legislation was the sale of an indlvidual into slavery. The terms of the sale would range from as little as one year to life. Sale into slavery often meant permanent exile from the family.

Although it is clear that immigration was the primary factor responsible for disruption of the labor market in Baltimore, slaveholders in Maryland continued to place the blame on the ever growing free Negro population.

As more and more Negro males lost their livelihood to whites, slaveholders pointed to what they perceived as the danger of a shiftless, lazy, idle free populace. As the situation deteriorated in the latter half of the decade, slave-holders attempted to unify their strength through a series of conventions designed at addressing the problem of a free, Negro community. Two courses of action, expulsion and re-enslavement, were debated by the members of the convention.

Slaveholders, particularly those of the Eastern Shore, exerted a significant influence on the proceedings of the State Legislature. They sought, through the introduction of new legislation and the revival of old vagrancy laws, to promote an atmosphere for the completion of their objective.

One example was legislation passed in 1858 which proposed severe sanctions on Negroes for acts such as simple larceny.[15] Acts of larceny as well as felonies brought terms of sale into slavery of from two to five years. Arson, on the other hand, brought the sentence of hanging or in some cases sale into slavery for life.

A study of the inmates of the Maryland State penitentiary in 1850 and 1860 will point to a marked contrast in the Negro population of the institution. Census schedules show a clear drop in the proportion of Negroes incarcerated in 1860 as opposed to 1850.[16]

	total pop.	Negro
1850	236	123
1860	428	109

These figures are certainly not a result of the improvement of conditions of the life of the Negro. They reflect, in my opinion, the tremendous increase in the sale into slavery of Negroes who had been charged with breaking the law.

Ironically, the conventions of slaveholders that had convened over a period of three years in the late 1850's voted against the expulsion or re-enslavement of the free Negro populace. Although they had branded the Negro as lazy and idle, they found them to be crucial to the states economy and their expulsion impossible for several reasons:

1.) Thousands of Negroes were employed in the city of Baltimore as domestics or laborers in various departments of industry.
2.) In rural areas where help was not abundant they furnlshed a large supply of agricultural labor.
3.) Their removal would deduct 50% from and household labor provided by all Negroes, slave and free, statewide.
4.) It would break up businesses and destroy the property of a large number of landowners and renters.
5.) Legislation could not be secured or approval obtained from a large body of the people of Maryland.

The slaveholders resolved to use existing leglslation and to impose new, strict legislation, to control the Negro.

The slaveholder understood that the most important possession of the Negro was his family. Therefore much of the legislation was aimed at punishing the violater by sale into slavery and obvious fragmentation of the family unit.

Conclusion

In the Ante-Bellum Decade the Negro was in a vice gripping from all sides. White immigrants, who had poured into Maryland by the thousands in the early 1850's had, as aforementioned, forced many Negro males out of the labor market in the city of Baltimore. The inability to compete with white labor left many without visible means for support.

A number of male slaves were sold into the South, their services no longer needed in the city. Still others were hired out to employers. Both processes served to fragment the family unit.

Thousands of free Negro males left the city in an attempt to find employment elsewhere.

Slaveholders, realizing the threat that this growing free community imposed on the institution of slavery, moved to rid the state of the free Negro populatlon. Unable to accomplish their objectives through violence or existing legislation, they initiated new legislation aimed at imposing an even greater control over the Negro populace.

One of the means used to accomplish this goal was the threat of re-inslavement often initiated as a result of the failure to abide by the strict letter of the law.

The Negro could not unionize or rebel in any effective way against authority because of the danger this action might impose on the unity of the family.

Legislation was designed to prohibit the Negro from assembling or unionizing (outside of white authority) with the threat of slavery as a sanction imposed for the failure to comply.

Faced with the probability that unionization or rebellion of any kind would ultimately fail, the Negro resolved to maintain whatever sense of family unity he could.... Clearly it was an unstable unity often purchased at the expense of individual or community freedom.

BALTIMORE FREE BLACK HOUSEHOLDS

WITH SLAVES 1820-1840

The following is an index of free black households with slaves in the city of Baltimore, Maryland as compiled from the Federal Population Census schedules of 1820, 1830, and 1840. Town slavery (more so than plantation slavery) encouraged the practice of the hiring out of slaves to businesses or individuals on a temporary basis. "Increased immigration" into the eastern seaboard states, coupled with a fast growing "free black" population flooded the labor market in Baltimore. As the need for slave labor in the city decreased, the practice of hiring out increased out of economic necessity. As this practice evolved incidences of separate habitation for slaves became apparent in the city. Some slaves were allowed...by their owners...to hire themselves out, and to keep a household of their own separatae from the property of the owner. Because of this practice, it is impossible to determine, strictly from the use of the census returns, which of these households are the households of free black slaveowners and whih are the households of white owned slaves allowed to live on separate premises. Nevertheless, an index such as this provides a good starting point for the researcher or genealogist interested in pursuing the study of slavery.

The index is organized as follows: Last name, first name or initial (if given), ward and page number (in parenthesis), and the number of female and male slaves. On occasion, there are several page numbers appearing on the left hand side of each page. One number is stamped and the other is hand-written. I have chosen to use the hand-written number because it is the only consistent numbering system of the two.

SLAVES BY NAME

An Index to Advertisements for Runaway Slaves in the Baltimore Sun 1837-1864

Stored in the archival records of various Maryland institutions are the full names (and in many cases descriptions) of thousands upon thousands of slaves and former slaves.

Among the sources available to the researcher are ledger and account books, applications for certificates of freedom, deeds or wills of manumission, family Bibles, slave inventories, and a number of daily and weekly newspapers placing advertisements for runaways.

These records provide information that is valuable to the historian and genealogist alike.

The following is an index to advertisements for runaways placed in the Baltimore Sun from May 1837 through October of 1864. The list represents only those ads in which the full name of the slave was indicated.

The index is constructred as follows: The slaves last name, first name, middle initial, age, date of ad (in Parenthesis), page number and alias. The absence of any of the above information indicates its failure to appear in the original ad.

This list represents 1,342 individuals and their aliases (1,380 names). Of that number 1,174 (87%) were male and 168 (13%) were female. Of 1,342 slaves 1,107 were listed with their ages.

The top five categories by age and sex were:

#1 males	21-30	(489)	44.0%
#2 males	10-20	(326)	29.0%
#3 males	31-45	(124)	11.2%
#4 Females	10-20	(60)	5.4%
#5 Females	21-30	(52)	4.0%

Although the overwhelming number of ads represent singular escapes or small groups of two or three, there are occasions when large groups escape at one time.

There is no consistency to the placement of ads with regard to paging or heading, i.e., personal, absconded, reward, runaway.

LAUREL CEMETERY 1852 - 1958

As late as the 1840's in the Baltimore area many Blacks were, at their deaths, buried in plots of ground provided by their respective churches.

A number of church burial grounds bordered Belle Air Avenue (now Gay Street) from East Chase Street north to Lanvale Street.

Drawings filed at the Maryland Historical Society name at least four of these plots as early as 1822. They were Bethel A.M.E. (African Methodist Episcopal), First Independent, Second Presbyterian, and Trinity.

A map filed in 1876 shows, along with the four previously mentioned, a colored burial ground (owned by the Sharp Street Methodist Church) at the corner of East Lanvale Street and Belle Air Avenue.

The initial legal transaction that led to the formation of Laurel Cemetery took place in September of 1851. Thomas Burgan Jr., a wealthy land owner of Baltimore County, sold a parcel of his land on Belle Air Avenue to three men.

According to the transfer of property the land was to be "Converted into a burial ground under the name and style of Laurel Cemetery for the benefit of the colored people of the city and county of Baltimore."

The choice seemed a logical one for several reasons. First, the land was privately owned and would serve as an attractive alternative to Blacks who wished to bury their loved ones in a place other than that provided by the church. Secondly, the hill had been used for years as a burial ground for the Black servants of local merchants and landowners.

On July 14, 1852 the cemetery was incorporated and a charter filed under the name of the Laurel Cemetery Company of Baltimore. The area now had its first non-sectarian cemetery for the exclusive use of Blacks.

Although at the beginning of the Civil War organized Black regiments were not allowed to take part in the fighting, the situatuion soon changed. As many as 200,000 Black soldiers served during the period from 1862 to 1865.

The Federal Government was faced with the problem of where to bury Black Union veterans with honor. Portions of cemeteries were seized and converted to National Cemeteries, in many cases without the consent of the owners.

Laurel Cemetery was no exception. More than 230 Black Clvil War Veterans were interred at the cemetery between September 1863 and February 1866.

A plan to widen Belle Air road was initiated and approved in 1911. While widening the road the city, without the permission of the Federal Government or the owners of the cemetery, disinterred the remains of the Civil War veterans from the Laurel property owned by the Federal Government.

The remains were re-interred at the Loudon National Cemetery on Frederick Road.

Between 1919 and 1920 a road (Elmley Avenue) was constructed on the southern boundary of Laurel. Not long after moving into their new homes the residents began dumping refuse over their back yard fences into the cemetery.

This, along with the lack of perpetual care on the part of lot owners in the cemetery, led to the demise of one of the most beautiful cemeteries the Baltimore area had ever known.

Efforts for a solution to the problems at Laurel continued for the next four decades.

In a maze of legal maneuvers conducted by members of the city law department in 1957 and 1958 the cemetery was destroyed without prior knowledge of the lot owners.

A small number of bodies (approximately three hundred to four hundred) were re-interred in a cornfield in Carrol County.

Litigation initiated by the N.A.A.C.P. (National Association For The Advancement Of Colored People) on behalf of several lot owners at Laurel failed to resolve the injustice that had been done.

Approximately five years later a Two Guys department store and parking lot was constructed on the site, over the remains of at least 2,000 of the people who had been buried there. (For the complete history of Laurel Cemetery you are invited to read "Laurel Hill Cemetery 1852-1958" by Ralph Clayton and Alma Moore in the Flower of The Forest Black Genealogical Journal vol. 1 #3 1984.)

SLAVEHOLDERS OF BALTIMORE 1860

"Oh get you ready, children,
don't you get weary
Get you ready, children,
don't you get weary
Dere's a great camp-meetin in de promised land."
Old slave song[1]

Although slave trading was on the decline in Baltimore prior to the outbreak of the Civil War, slave owners were far from becoming a vanishing breed. The following index, which was compiled from Federal Census slave schedules for Baltimore in 1860, points to, by its sheer magnitude, the veracity of that statement. Any study of a primary source such as the census is beset with several problems. One is the use of terminologies that remain unexplained in that source. In order to discern their meaning one must use a combination of available historical data and assumption based on "good common sense". (Hopefully more of the former than the latter). Secondly, one must contend with enumerators' varying styles of handwriting. There are several ways to overcome this problem. When the records deal with city residents (as in this case), a study of Baltimore city directories may provide clues to spelling. A close look at the individual style of each enumerator's handwriting is helpful in determining subtle differences in letters of similar formation. Finally, a thorough double-check of all names is extremely important.

Included with this index is a chart the author has devised, displaying an accurate statistical breakdown of slaves and their owners in Baltimore in 1860. One conclusion we can draw from this study is the predominance of female slaves in the Balatimore area (80%). Most of these had domestic chores to perform i.e. washer-woman, cook, ironer, etc. Interestingly, a study of the Cecil County slave population of the same time period reveals 951 slaves, 483 of which are female (50.5%). The rigors of plantation life obviously demanded the employment of a greater number of male slaves. This is not to say that life was easy for the slave in the urban setting. A thesis set forth by M. Ray Della, Jr.[2] proposed that the great influx of German and Irish immigrants in the 1850's drove many free blacks as well as slaves from the northern labor market, both in semi-skilled and unskilled jobs. According to Della those not trained as domestics "Probably left the city to go to New York or Boston, if they were free, or were sold into the deep South, if they were slave."[3]

Owners with the foresight to train their slaves in domestic labor were able, to a degree, to offset the loss of demand in the labor force resulting from the influx of the immigrants. This helped to bring about an increase in the practice known as hiring-out. The hiring out of slaves was accomplished in several ways. One, the owner signed a binding contract between himself and the employer; a contract which covered a specified time period and pre-arranged payments to the owner, with liability for the slave's welfare in the hands of the employer. Two, an owner allowed his or her slave to hire themselves out to an employer of their own choosing, provided the slave paid, out of his earnings a pre-arranged amount to his owner on a regular basis. Any money left over was his for the keeping.

The slave schedules will, in some cases, name the owner and, in the event his slave was hired out, the employer who did the hiring. I have included in this index the names of owners only since a check of that schedule will reveal the employers' names if it be so desired. The case where an owner's name is followed by the term, Estate Of, probably indicates that the owner is deceased and his slave property has not yet changed hands through the execution of his will. The term, In Trust, can have several meanings. It may indicate that slaves are being held by a second party for the owner while he or she is out of town. The other possibility is that the second party is holding slaves temporarily until the deceased owner's will is executed. For example, in the following ad that ran in a Baltimore paper in July 1860 Owen Cecil, Administrator of the will of the deceased may have held the slaves prior to execution of the will.

"The negroes belonging to the estate of William Cecil-slaves for life. Immediately after the sale of the household furniture, as above, the undersigned, administrator of the estate of William Cecil, deceased, will sell by order of the Orphans Court of Baltimore City. The negroes belonging to the estate of William Cecil, most of whom are slaves for life. As follows:

NEGRO MAN, David 18 years of age - slave for life
NEGRO MAN named William, about 48 years of age - slave for life
NEGRO WOMAN named Sarah - slave for life
NEGRO GIRL named Jane, 23 years of age - slave for eight years
NEGRO named Andrew - slave for life

We call the attention of those wanting Negroes to the above sale. Terms as prescribed by the court - One third cash, and the balance in two equal payments, on credits of four and eight months, with interest from the day of the sale, and that where credit is given, bond with good security. shall be taken."

Owen Cecil, Administrator of William Cecil, deceased
ADREON and Co. Aucts.[4]

The slave schedules of 1860 list him with twenty-four female and twenty-six male slaves. His slave depot, located at 282 West Pratt Street (now 224 W. Pratt), was close to the slave jail owned by another of Baltimore's largest slave dealers, Hope H. Slatter. Slatter's jail held slaves who were often sold on the auction block in the courthouse behind the building. "The building which housed the slaves at night was a two story brick affair with barred windows, and its appearance was not unlike that of a stockade. The women slaves occupied the second floor, the men the ground floor. During the daytime they did a little work, but generally loitered about the yard playing cards, singing and dancing to tunes fiddled by some of their fellows."[5]

Another dealer, Joseph S. Donavan, kept his slave jail on the southwest corner of Camden and Eutaw Streets.[6] Although he is listed with only eighteen slaves in the schedules, it is safe to assume that hundreds of them passed through his hands on their way to the South.

A Barber's Shop At Richmond

The Baltimore City directory of 1870 reflects a number of Black owned businesses. The number one business in the community was the barber shop. Taken from the Illustrated London News, 9 March 1861.

THE BLACK FAMILIES OF EAST BALTIMORE - 1870

The following is an index of the census schedule listings of the Black families of East Baltimore (Wards 1-6) for 1870.

Statistics reveal a significant growth in the Black population of Baltimore from 27,898 in 1860 to 39,558 in 1870[1].

This growth was due, in part, to natural increase and the migration from other states and rural areas of Maryland of substantial numbers of Blacks into Baltimore after the Civil War.

Of the total Black population of wards 1-6 in 1870, 799 (8%) were born out of state...540 (5%) from Virginia.

A study of the late 1860's and early 1870's in Baltimore will reveal a number of changes occuring in the Black community.

The educational system opened its' doors to Black children in 1867 with the formation of ten schools city-wide.

The passage of the 15th Amendment resulted in the voter registration of large numbers of Blacks affiliating themselves with the Republican Party.

Black Churches (six in number in East Baltimore) took deeper root as the center of political and social (as well as religious) activity.

Clubs, organizations, and societies were on the rise as well as Black-owned businesses.

Throughout the city, Blacks owned shops dealing in refreshments, carpentry, provisions, hair dye manufacturing and barbering to name a few.

In order to form an accurate analysis of the Black community two documents are of great importance...Baltimore city directories and Federal Census Population Schedules.

City directories reflect churches, societies, businesses, residence and occupation figures along with the names of approximately 45% to 50% of the total overall Black population.

[1] contains both slave and free stats

Census schedules indicate the entire populace in 1870, denoting heads of house, age, occupation, place of birth, education, and property holdings alongside individual names.

While using these records it is crucial to recognize the method of collection, reason for the documents creation, and the historical context in which the collection is made.

Much of the data was recorded as a result of visual and audible interpretation, leading to an abberation of certain classes of information.

As a result caution must be exercised when applying information gleaned from census tracts to sociological, historical, and genealogical studies.

With the proper precautions such an index can reveal a potential wealth of information for all three categories of research.

The index is organized by surname, first name, middle initial (if given), age, ward number (in parenthesis), and page number. An asterisked name represents an individual listed in the records as a head of house.

Page numbers are followed by the letter A or B. The numbering system chosen for this index was the stamped number in the upper right hand corner of every other page of the schedule. The reason for this choice was the consistency of that numbering system throughout the document. The letter A represents the numbered or stamped page, while the letter B represents the following unstamped page.

The following is the interpretation of a sample entry in the index.

BLACK BALTIMORE, 1820-1870

A collection of articles by Ralph Clayton

The Effect of Immigration on the Negro in Baltimore 1850-1860 describes the effects of predominently non-Black immigration into the city on the lives of the free and slave Blacks before the Civil War.

Slaveholders of Baltimore, 1860 discusses the social history of the slaves, and provides a listing of all slaveholders enumerated in the 1860 Federal Census.

Slaves by Name - the notices of runaway slaves were routinely published in the newspapers and now provide an important resource for family historians. This article provides an index to such notices in the Baltimore Sun for the years 1837-1864.

Baltimore Free Black Households with Slaves, 1820-1840 - in a city like Baltimore not all slaves were required to live on the premises of their master, and they frequently appear in the households of other Blacks who often were friends or relations. In addition, a suprising number of free Blacks were themselves slaveholders.

Black Familes of East Baltimore, 1870 - this first census after Emancipation is the first to identify all Blacks by name, age, birthplace, etc. and is of great value to family historians and sociologists. This article provides a listing of every Black in Wards 1 to 6 of East Baltimore.

Laurel Cemetery, 1852-1958 - a brief history of the cemetery and a partial reconstruction of internments there.
